We hereby confirm that the article you have enquired about satisfies the requirements of the RoHS Directive. Substances to which restrictions apply by virtue of the Directive are set out in the Annex.

In many cases, Bürkert Werke GmbH & Co. KG is not the manufacturer of EEE within the meaning of the RoHS Directive. This is in particular the case where the products delivered by us are not end products for commercial or private use but parts and components for further industrial processing.

Nevertheless, we are pleased to comply with your request in order to support you in your duty to prepare the necessary technical documentation pursuant to Art. 7 (b) of the RoHS Directive and § 4 (3) ElektroStoffV [Ordinance on the Restriction of the Use of Certain Hazardous Substances in Electrical and Electronic Equipment] in combination with the standards DIN EN 50581 and ISO 63000.

The EU RoHS Directive 2011/65/EU, as also the Regulation on Electrical and Electronic Equipment, being the German implementing act, contains various restrictions on the use of certain substances. The reference value for the restricted substances is in each case the homogenous material; the term "homogenous material" is legally defined in § 2, no. 19 ElektroStoffV. In turn, numerous exceptions to the restricted substances are permitted; for the most part, these apply for a limited period of time.

Apart from the exceptions set out in the Annex, the article does not contain any restricted substances under RoHS above the legal limit in the homogenous material.

Apart from our own examinations, we base the above information in particular on the statements and details provided by our suppliers.

Should you have any queries, we are at your service at all times.
